HEART THRILLING GEMS.

An Old Fashioned Thanksgiving.
It may be I am getting old and like too much to dwell
Upon the days of bygone years, the days I loved so well;
But, thinking of them now, I wish somehow that I could know
A simple old Thanksgiving day like those of long ago,
When all the family gathered round a table richly spread,
With little Jamie at the foot and grandpa at the head,
The youngest of us all to greet the oldest with a smile,
With mother running in and out and laughing all the while.
It may be I'm old fashioned, but it seems to me today
We're too much bent on having fun to take the time to pray.
Each little family grows up with fashions of its own.
It lives within a world itself and wants to be alone.
It has its special pleasures, its circles,
too, of friends.
There are no get together days; each
one its journey wends, Pursuing what it likes the best in its particular way,
Letting the others do the same upon
Thanksgiving day.

I like the olden ways the best, when relatives were glad
To meet the way they used to do when I was but a lad.
The old home was a rendezvous for all
our kith and kin,
And, whether living far or near, they all came trooping in With shouts of "Hello, daddy!" as they fairly stormed the place
And made a rush for mother, who would stoop to wipe her face Upon her gingham apron before she kissed them all,
Hugging them proudly to her breast,
the grownups and the small.

Then laughter rang throughout the home, and, oh, the jokes they told!
From Boston Frank brought new ones, but father sprung the old.
All afternoon we chatted, telling what we hoped to do,
The struggles we were making and the hardships we'd gone through.
We gathered round the fireplace. How fast the hours would fly!
It seemed before we'd settled down
'twas time to say goodby.
Those were the glad Thanksgivings the old time families knew,
When relatives could still be friends and every heart was true.

He knows when life presses heavy,
And seems more than we can bear,
And so he tells us so sweetly
To ease on him our care,
He knows when the pains we suffer
Makes life seem so incomplete,
But he says, "I too have suffered,"
And the fellowship is sweet.
He knows when friendships fall us
And our hearts with sorrow ache,
But his own had denied and betrayed
him,
And he "will not leave nor forsake."
He knows that joy and sunshine,
Has flooded many a day,
And the peace and the joy of his presence
Has driven all fear away.

He knows what is best for his children,
He knows—the dear Father we love,
He knows all the way that He taketh,
To bring to the mansions above,
He knows when the road we are traveling
Is too long for our weary feet,
So He bids us struggle no longer
And "gives His beloved sleep."
Written by Mrs. Hamlin Fultz, Portland, Maine.

A Lord, monarch of worlds untold,
To thee my voice I raise;
For all thy blessings manifold
I render thanks and praise.
For peace and plenty, health and friends,
For home, where love hath sway,
For liberty my heart ascends
On this Thanksgiving day.

A THANKSGIVING AT SEA.

He shipped with us at Liverpool, a hairy little sharp eyed man, round shouldered, nervous and about forty-five years of age. Our steward had left us the very day we cleared to sail for Calcutta, and at the last moment I hired this fellow.

He signed the papers as John Skyssee and said he was a German, but later on he dropped a card on which was engraved the name of Ivan Skyssee, and after that I had no doubt that he was a Russian.

He was a jewel and no discount about it. But he never spoke of himself. He could talk and talk forever upon any subject relating to science, art or morals. But when we began to quiz him a bit about himself none of us could pry a word out of him.

Thanksgiving day, that good old New England festival, which we knew occurred on the last Thursday in November, was fast approaching, and by referring to the nautical almanac we saw it was only two weeks off. So one day when the second mate and I were at mess together he asked me if I did not wish I could provide the crew with turkey in honor of the day.

"Yes," I replied, "but all we have left are about three cans of turkey, and John tells me the meat in them is of little use."

"Never mind," replied the second mate. "I wish you would tell John to keep the cans we have until a week from Thursday and then open them all and deal them out to the men. It would remind many of them of the good old days they knew at home."

"John," said I to the cook when I had lighted my pipe, "keep all those cans of turkey until Thursday week and then open them and give every man on board a bit. That will be a New England holiday, and all of our folks will be eating roast turkey then. So we want to follow the home habits as much as we can here."

"Perhaps the captain would like me to make him a turkey and roast it and stuff it as his wife does at home," said John.

"If you could, John, I would give you a five pound note," was my reply, "but as that is impossible we must do the next best thing."

After that I noticed John was more busy than ever about his duties in the galley. Several times I detected strong odors coming from his realm, and on one occasion I asked him if he was a chemist as well as a cook. His naturally pale face colored a bit as he replied that he always liked to use plenty of chemicals of lime around the galley when his ship was under the tropics.

So we drifted and tossed and sailed on in the north Atlantic until we had turned the Cape of Good Hope and begun to climb up the shore toward Calcutta, when one morning the second mate said to me:

"Have you forgotten that this is Thanksgiving day, captain? If not too much trouble I hope you will remind John about that canned turkey and have him give us a taste of what the folks are getting at home. I feel terribly blue and lonesome when I think of home."

"All right, captain," was John's answer to my request for the canned turkey. "I'll get it ready."

All that forenoon I was busy with my ship papers, putting my accounts in readiness against the time I should get to Calcutta. The second mate and I came on deck together, and as we did so a familiar odor assailed my nostrils. It could be nothing else than the good old smell of sage and onions, combined with the richer perfume of roasting fowl.

"Your dinner is ready," cried John, coming up and touching his hat very much more politely than was his wont.

He led us to the cabin, and there—great Scott!—on the middle of the table, right in the port of honor, was a good roast turkey as I would have bought in Vermont for 15, and around it were cranberry sauce, turnips, squash and all the usual fixings, while smoking on a side table was a big plum pudding.

"Eat hearty," was the word from John. "It is wholesome and will not hurt you any. See, I eat some myself!"

Thus encouraged we took hold with a will and found the meat not only tender and cooked just right, but the flavor was equal to that of any bird we had ever tasted. When we had been fully satisfied I took up the wick-bone and claimed it as a keepsake of our Thanksgiving dinner in mid-ocean.

While the second mate collected the bones to give them to his pet dog. At the time I was eating the turkey I had seen him get the meat, and when ever we asked him about it he skillfully evaded our direct assaults upon his secret, laughing and turning the conversation into other channels.

I went forward to look at the fare of the crew in the fore-cabin, and the second mate went on deck to feed the dog. The dinner of the men was every bit as good as ours, and the way they ate did me good.

"Here Carlo's canine instincts could not tell it from turkey, captain," said the second mate, "and I know it can be nothing else than the real American bird, but how John got it is more than I can tell." As he said this he walked in the galley range, took off the cover and was about to throw the bones in the sea.

"For God's sake, stop!" cried John. "You'll blow up the ship." And he took the bones from the second mate's hand and threw them in a safe box.

"You'll blow up the ship," said John. "You'll blow up the ship," said John. "You'll blow up the ship," said John.

AN OLD TIME

THANKSGIVING.

An aged lady recently contributed to the Brooklyn Citizen this description of a New England Thanksgiving three-quarters of a century ago, when life was simpler and perhaps sadder than it is today:

The house was cleaned from the roof to the cellar the week before, as Thanksgiving in New England was a greater holiday than Christmas or New Year and it must be observed by everybody. The house was full of nice odors. One day it was mince pie and fried cakes, then it would be sweet pickles and election cake, then pumpkin pie—my sister Persie counted ten in a row—then plum pudding and Wednesday night a chicken pie that would almost crowd the top of the oven and would come on to the table—a piece of it, I mean, warmed up—every Sunday till the next year. It held the plumpest chickens and sweet apple quarters that had been half dried, and the meat and gravy were sweet as the apples, and spices and other goodies, and all in a large milk pan, with a flaky crust at top, and bottom a quarter of an inch thick.

To make that crust Persie and I had to burn clean coals in an iron kettle and gather up the ashes, and mother poured hot water on them, then strained the liquid and stirred it into some buttermilk, and that made it bubble and drizzle just as soda nowadays.

Thursday morning we were up bright and early, and mother read a chapter in the Bible. Then we all stood up while father prayed for us, and I felt almost like crying, it was so solemn, but I forgot all over the nice breakfast and the walk of a mile to the church and the music and the return at noon to a dinner smoking hot on the table, and better than all, six little cousins that had come from North Hampton to surprise us and stay till Saturday and take us back with them till school commenced.

Mother had arranged a party for us that evening, but we could not wait for that, so our meals were brought out, and we climbed the long hills with a group of girls and boys and seated ourselves, letting one boy ride with us on each sled to steer it, and thus we glided down the long hill, then out to the frozen pond again and again till the sun sent its cherry beams clear across the icy mirror of the pond and we went in to prepare for our party.

The parlor was all in order. The floor was covered with white and swept into curves. The woodwork was a bright blue, white ash curtains at the windows and a plain stand with a green bellows—don't it and a large Bible resting on that. Six wooden chairs and a stiff backed rocking chair composed the furniture of the room. Stiff and formal as it looked, that was not the place for party or party games. The next room was for our pleasure ground. It was large and roomy.

THE HOME CIRCLE.

Pleasant Reveries—A Column Dedicated to Tired Mothers as they Join the Home Circle at Evening Tide.

While you are thankful do something to make others thankful.

Thanksgiving is the people's day; the day that stands for home and happiness; for gratitude and benevolence; for plenty and peace.

Home gathering time, what fulness of joy. How the heart bounds as we clasp the dear hands again, and the eyes sparkle with delight. Foretastes of heaven; while they finger let gratitude, let love, and affection so twine about that the tendrils will reach the very heart strings and cling through all the years of doubts and disappointments, sunshine and shadow.

Let us be glad, and being glad, give thanks. Glad for health, for prosperity, and the promise of prosperity which is breathed from every hill and whispered from every valley in our broad, green land. Let the children, too, of your homes so laugh in their young glee that they shall remember and be grateful for the day. Don't mind their noise for children's laughter and exclamations of joy are second to no music on earth.

The earliest recorded Thanksgiving day was observed in this country in 1621, when the first fruits of weary toil were harvested by Plymouth Colony. Bradford sent out men to get wild fowl to help out the feast, and full of gratitude for their preservation and for the scanty harvest they had wrung from the unwilling stony soil, these brave ancestors of ours lifted up their hearts and voices in thankfulness to God. Brave men they were, and hopeful, full of endurance, and indomitable forces and energy. Food was scanty, perils threatened on every side, and yet these faithful pioneers were ready to praise God for his goodness and mercy.

The summer is gone, leaving behind it a rich harvest. Plenty reigns benignly throughout the land. The autumn has filled the barns and granaries everywhere to the very eaves, and the cellars are overflowing with the fruits of the earth. What good reason have the American people, and especially the farming people, to be grateful. Surely our path is pleasant and our hearts should be filled with peace and thankfulness.

THANKSGIVING.

We have many things to be thankful for in our day and generation and in our beautiful and fruitful country.

Men and children are cheerful. The farmer has had his reward in large crops and fair prices. The merchant is buying and selling on a good margin. The whole business world is alert with hopeful energy.

As a nation we have much to be thankful for. We have religious liberty; we have political freedom; our power classes live better, dress better, and show more pleasures than the poor of other nations; we are not ravaged by war, but peace makes possible industry and plenty. We have a broad land rich in natural resources that generation after generation will discover new riches and develop new industries of which today we do not even dream. If we have, or if we think we have, but little to be thankful for as individuals, it would still be wise to cultivate a spirit of thankfulness for its own sake. The only absolutely feeble and irredeemable creature on God's earth is the thankful man. He is the chronic grumbler from whose presence we wish to flee. He sees only the dark side of life. He sees only a frown and a kick and cause for the world, and what he often gets in return.

As we go back to the old home to spend Thanksgiving Day with father and mother and sister and brother, let us have a thankful Thanksgiving and rejoice.

A LOOK INTO HOMES.

Thanksgiving! What magic is that word! And how it comes with a vision of fathers and mothers who are waiting with loving hearts and glad anticipations the home coming of the children and grandchildren. And now they gather at the familiar fireside and around the beautifully laden table, happy, unbroken groups. Ah! what sweet memories cluster around those vigorous never-to-be-forgotten days that the years change. The family circle has been broken into by death. Fathers and mothers, and perhaps some to whom they had a Thanksgiving greetings in the earthly home, have gone to the Home above. Where there were glad reunions there are now vacant places, each made a sacred place, the echo of a smiling voice, or dream of radiant face.

You can't Tell Prices Unless You Know Values.

A little bit of a rug was sold last week for $10,000.

It wouldn't cover the space of two dinner chairs but as an art treasure it was worth the money.

You can buy rugs big enough to cover a house for one thousandth part of that sum, and you can pay more for a smaller rug—and get your money's worth every time.

The point is, you must know rug values before you can safely compare size or price in rugs.

Two of the leading American manufacturers of rugs are making perfect duplicates of the rich Oriental patterns—at scarcely a hundredth part of the cost of the original.

We have some of these beautiful American Oriental rugs on display now at very low prices.

More Light for Less Money with the "ANGLE LAMPS"

A Lamp Suitable for Parlor, Library, Dining Room, Sitting Room, Study or Den.

The Angle Lamp is an oil lamp with all the easy lighting and extinguishing features of gas.

Unlike all other lights, the burner is not upright, but extends from the side of the fixture at almost a right angle. This doubles the effect of the light for the best brilliance of the full flat side of the flame is thrown directly downward upon your book or table.

One quart of oil if used in the "Angle Lamp" will give 16 hours of the finest light.

No blackened chimneys no odor or smoke or oil. The ball shaped globe of the "Angle Lamp" induces an air current totally unlike the forced draft created by the usual lamp chimney which it replaces.

The "Angle Lamp" is lighted like gas at the turn of a button and the striking of a match, it is extinguished like gas with a single turn. The "Angle Lamp" differs from gas only in that it needs occasional filling. This is done by merely lifting out a separate font or tank and filling it as you would a bottle at the faucet. There is no unscrewing of anything, no taking off the glassware or moving the lamp from its place—it is but a two minutes job and is necessary only once or twice a week.

We have "Angle Lamps" in four different styles. The one burner, two burners, three burners and four burners styles.

Price of one burner style, $3.25, 4.25 and 4.55

Price of two burners style, $6.90, 7.95, and 9.70

The three burners at $10.75

Four burners, $12.20

These prices are for lamps complete with shades and domes, all ready to light.

Order by mail. We prepay express charges on all purchases of $5.00 or over.
